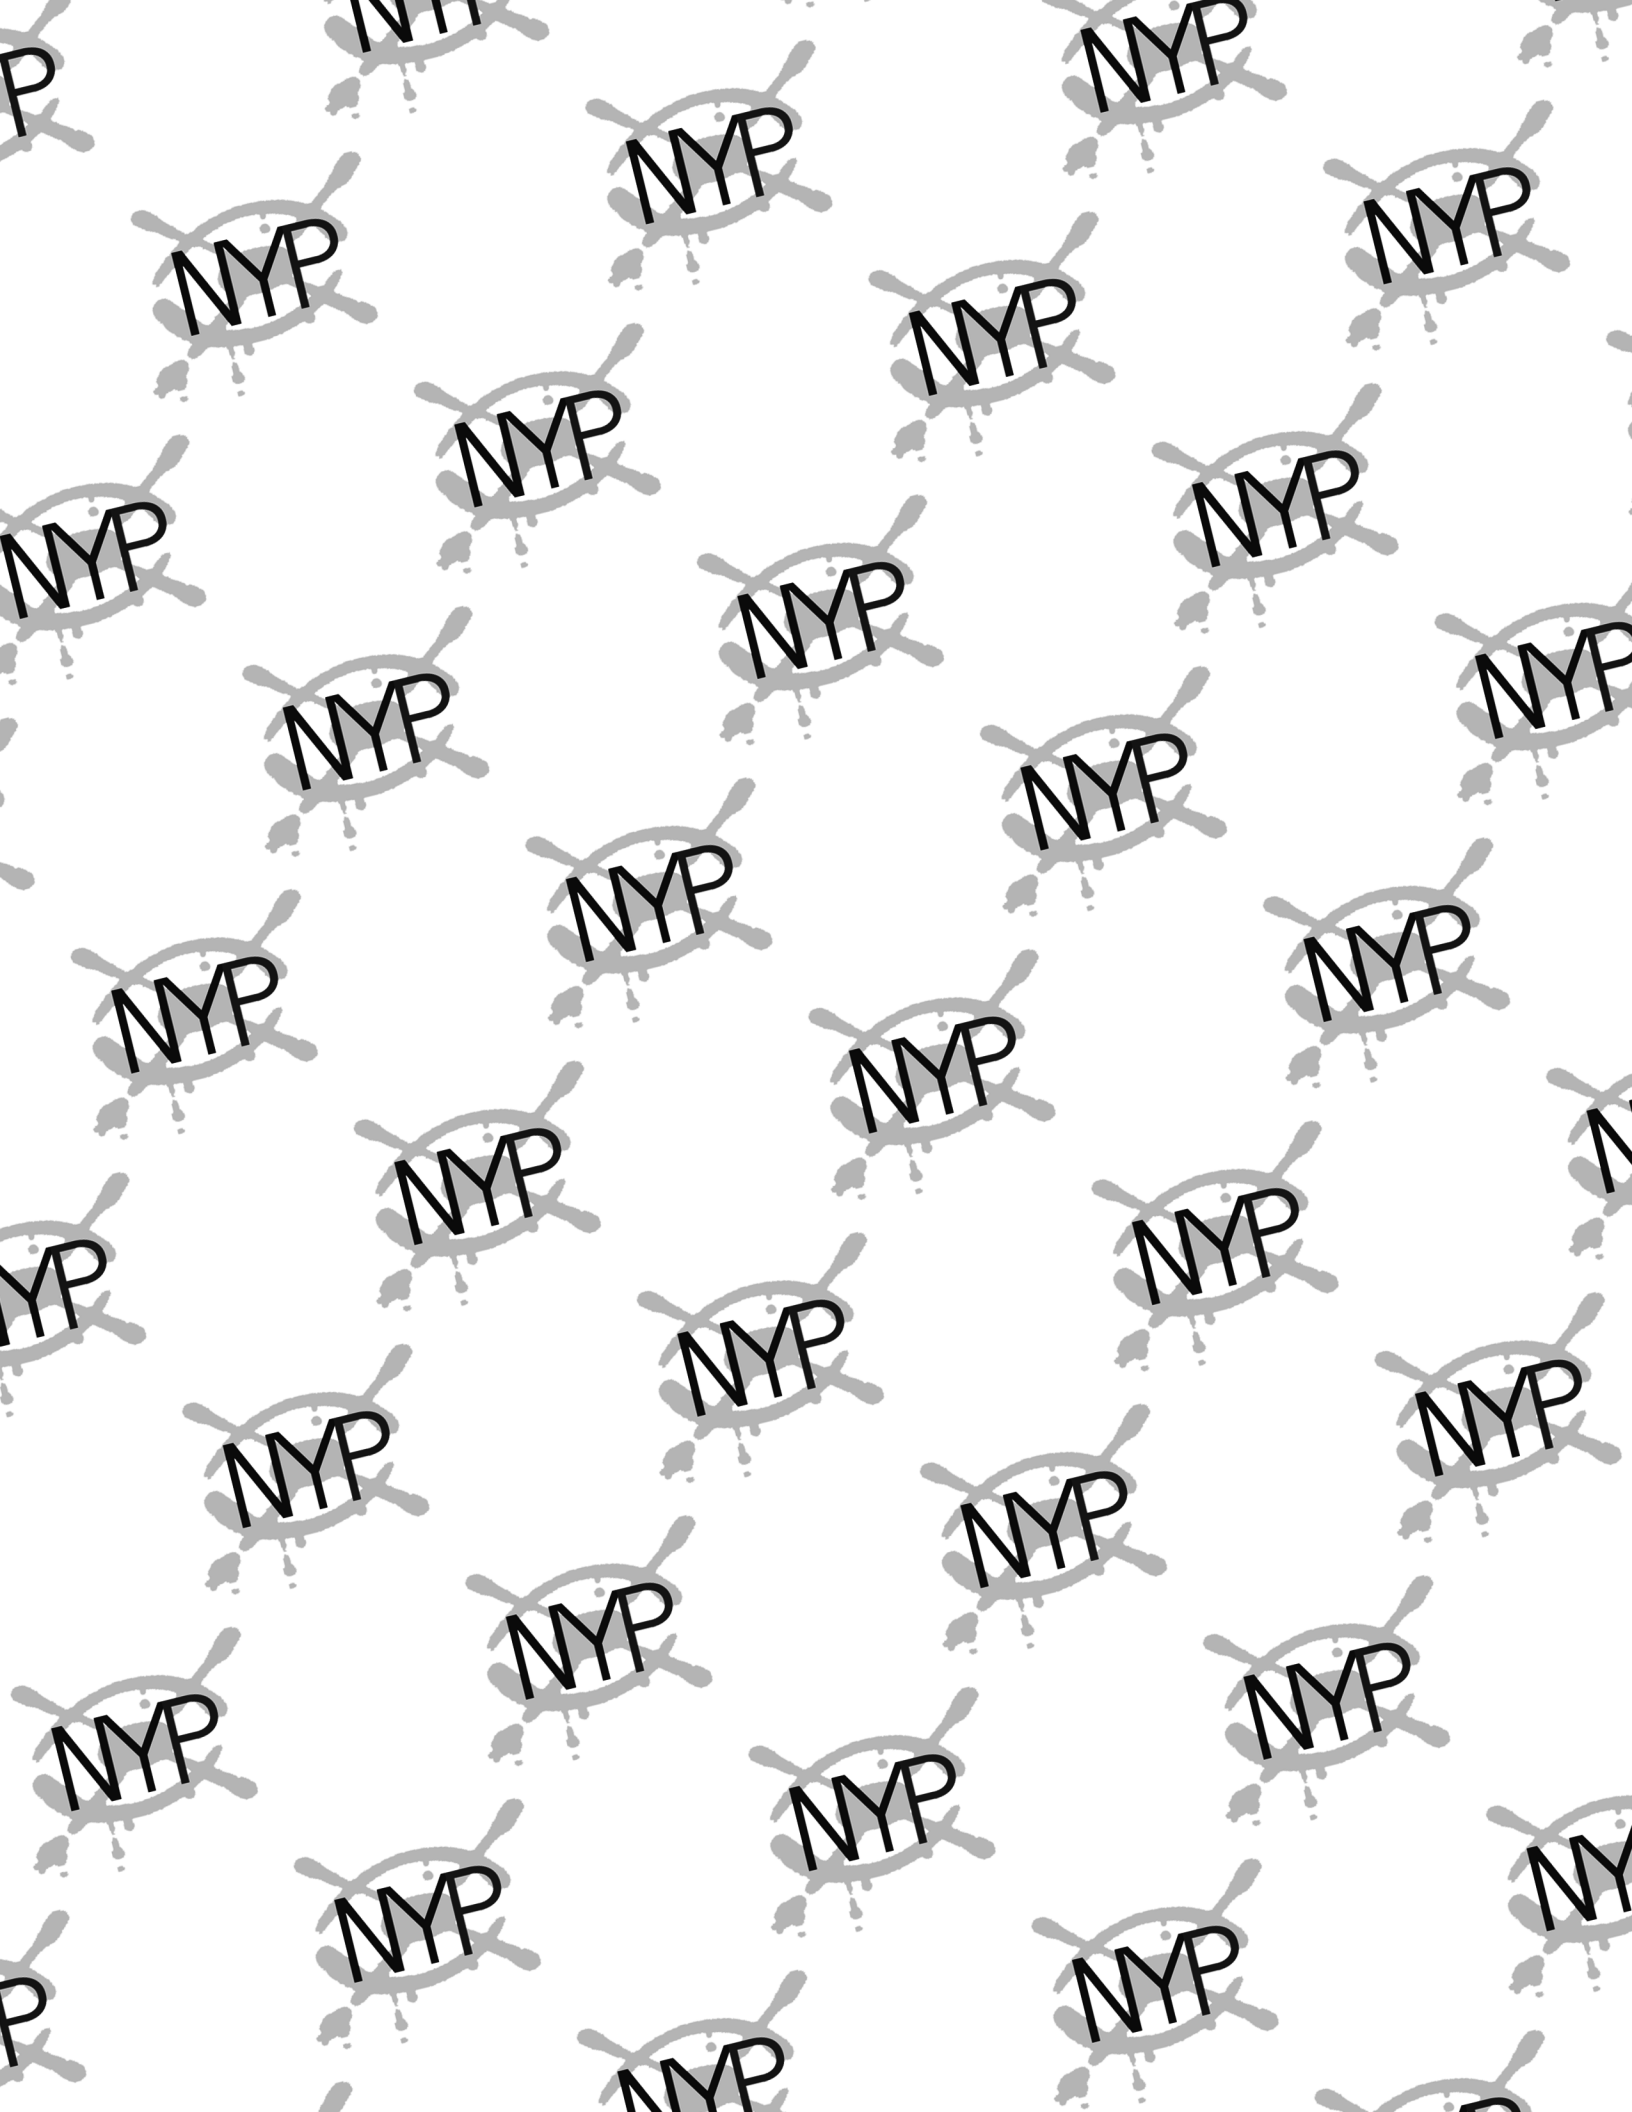
NOT YOUR PUPPETS

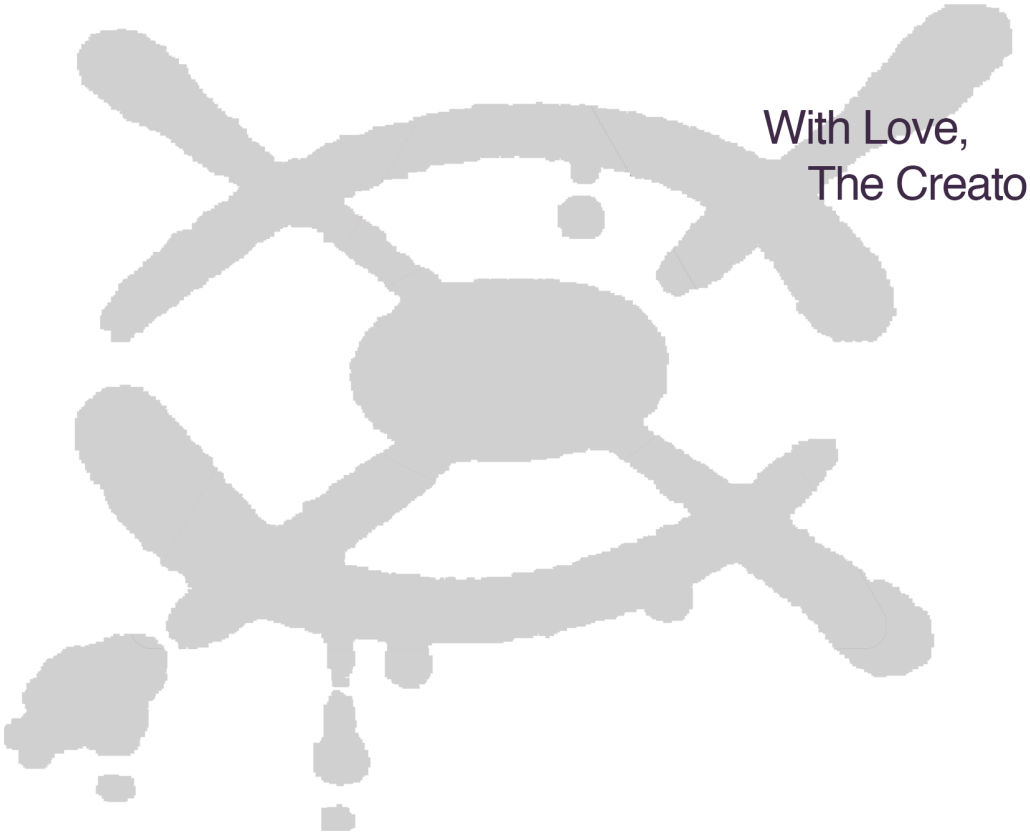
A GRAVITY FALLS FANZINE



NYP

Dear Readers,

The Not Your Puppets Fanzine was made to shed light on the abuse the characters in Gravity Falls faced in the show. This fanzine was a direct response to members of the fandom romanticizing this abuse, which in turn negatively affects real life situations involving abuse. A majority of the fanzine's artists are people who faced or or facing abuse themselves, and gives an outlet to them along with emotional support for victims of abuse. Along with this, a majority of the money earned with the Not Your Puppets Fanzine will be going to The Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network (RAINN). This way, the fandom can not only support abuse victims emotionally, but also financially. In the end, the creators of the Not Your Puppets Fanzine wish for the fandom to be a safer place, and we hope that these fanworks will make the fandom better! Many thanks to the wonderful artists who have contributed their time and skills to this fanzine, without you we wouldn't have the wonderful zine we have today.



With Love,
The Creators of NYP

Triangle Nightmares

Dipper had not slept much, if at all, the past few days, but he could not close his eyes for longer than a few seconds tonight, even as exhausted as he was. Every time he closed his eyes nightmares from two different perspectives plagued him. He could hear that laugh, see that bright yellow, and everywhere there were triangles; it haunted him. He startled awake every time, staring up at the attic ceiling blankly. He didn't move, get up, try to read, because everything hurt in a way he'd never hurt before. He could hardly think, wavering between nightmares and the ache of being awake. As time slipped by, he was losing his ability to tell what was real.

His body didn't feel right. There were bruises and cuts and fork-shaped indents in his arms and he was pretty sure his left wrist was sprained if not broken. Bill had done this to him, and yet there was a small voice in his brain telling him it was his own fault.

He'd been tricked, lied to, but he'd fallen for it. He'd let Bill use his body, let him destroy the laptop, and now he was suffering the consequences; his guilt and pain. He could not tell if the voice was his own or the demon's, they blended together as they had when he was in the mindscape, when Bill had spoken from his body, and could do nothing but watch as Bill tried to destroy everything he cared about. He felt useless.

Dipper held up his hand in the pale moonlight that shone through his window. It hurt to move. There were scratches and bruises and a pain that had not lessened in the time he'd been back in his body. He felt as messed up as the laptop, shattered glass and broken mechanics on the floor. And maybe he was, he'd been crushed by Bill too. Dipper could almost hear the demons laugh echo in the night and he couldn't tell if that was real. He clenched his fist, despite the pain that shot down his arm. He would not let Bill get the best of him. He hadn't been beaten yet.

He would not be tricked again.
